However, in recent decades, there has been a resurgence of interest in Confucianism, both within China and internationally. This "Confucian Renaissance" has been driven by a number of factors, including the rise of China as a global power, the search for a distinctively Chinese model of development, and the increasing recognition of the importance of ethical values in a rapidly changing world.

The Philosophical Foundations of Confucianism

Confucianism is a system of ethical and political thought that was developed by Confucius (551-479 BCE) and his followers. The central virtues in Confucianism are ren (benevolence), yi (righteousness), li (propriety), zhi (wisdom), and xin (good faith). These virtues are cultivated through education, self-reflection, and the practice of ritual.

Confucianism is also a highly pragmatic philosophy, emphasizing the importance of social order and harmony. Confucian thinkers believe that society is best governed when it is led by benevolent rulers who set a good example for their subjects.
